Before this session, the extremists would have taken over Congress had they elected a leader among them. But it was not done. The moderates were politically intelligent. In 1906, the session at Calcutta was presided over by Dadabhai Naoroji. The moderates had chosen Naoroji to preside Congress. Naoroji, 'the Grand old man of India,' was respected by the moderates and extremists alike. In this session, the Congress adopted Swaraj as the goal of Indian people.
