68th B.P.S.C. (Pre) 2022

Ans. (a)

- During the years 1919-1922, two mass movements emerged in India as a means to oppose British rule : the Khilafat movement and the Non-Cooperation movement. The Non-Cooperation Movement marked the beginning of the Gandhian Movement against British colonialism.
- The movement saw significant participation from students, who left government-established schools and colleges in large numbers to join the cause. However, as the movement progressed, some of them began to harbor reservations about Gandhi's program. Hence statement 3 is correct.

- Indian business groups, benefiting from the emphasis on Swadeshi (indigenous production and boycott of foreign goods) by the nationalists, supported the economic boycott called for during the movement.
- Peasants also actively participated in the movement, but it did lead to confrontations between different castes, particularly between the lower and upper castes.
- Initially, the movement was led by individuals from the middle classes, but as time passed, many of them expressed reservations about Gandhi's approach. Hence statement 1 is incorrect.
- The Non-Cooperation Movement provided an opportunity for the oppressed masses to express their grievances against both the British and their Indian oppressors.
- Women played a crucial role in the movement, participating in large numbers, giving up purdah (seclusion), and contributing their ornaments to the Tilak Fund.
- The movement faced violent reprisals from the police, resulting in the loss of many lives.
- Regarding the Justice Party, which was active in the Madras Presidency, it did not support the Non-Cooperation Movement. The party sought to work within the existing political system and preferred continued British presence. They disagreed with Mahatma Gandhi, particularly due to his praise for Brahminism. Hence statement 2 is incorrect.
- In summary, the Non-Cooperation Movement saw widespread participation from various sections of society, but as it progressed, some segments showed reservations, and it also faced opposition from political groups like the Justice Party.
