The performance of other programs like the Integrated Rural Development Program (IRDP) has also been as par with or better than the IRDP. For example, the National Rural Employment Programme, which was launched in October 1980 along with the IRDP, generated about 1.8 million man-days of employment against the target of 1.5 million man-days of employment during the Sixth Plan period. The administration of the Jawahar Rozgar Yojana started in the year 1989 and was placed under the Gram Panchayats. Hence the assertion is correct, but the reason is not correct.

Ans. (a)

Providing Urban Amenities to Rural Areas (PURA) is a strategy for rural development in India. This concept was given by the former President Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam. On the eve of India's 54th Republic Day, in 2003, Dr. Kalam addressed the nation explaining to them his vision of transformation of rural India through PURA model. PURA was envisaged as a self-sustainable and viable model of service delivery to be managed through an implementation framework between the different stakeholders involved, namely local people, public authorities and the private sector.
