Indian Princely States

*Butler Committee constituted in the year 1927 was also known as Indian States Committee. It was constituted to study the relation between the Indian Government and Indian Princely States and to recommend economic and the financial reforms for British India and the Indian Princely States. *Indian kings selected Sir Leslie Scott as representative of Indian princes to the committee to represent their point of view.

*In December 1927 A.D., All India States People's Conference was organized in which more than 1500 political workers from various states participated. Balwant Rai Mehta, Manilal Kothari and G.R. Abhyankar played an important role in its organization. *Jawahar Lal Nehru was chosen the President of All India States People Conference in 1939 A.D. *Most of the Princely Provinces were merged into Indian Union by 1947 A.D. By 15th August, 1947 A.D., except Junagarh, J&K and Hyderabad all princely states joined the Indian Union and the remaining three too joined by the end of 1948 A.D. *British Government gave the status of Independence to all provinces which complicated the scenario of a merger of states to form one Union. This problem was handled wisely by Sardar Vallabh Bhai Patel and unity of India was attained. *On 26th October, 1947 A.D., King of Kashmir, Hari Singh signed the 'instrument of accession'. Sheikh Abdullah was appointed Prime Minister. *Standstill agreement was signed between Lord Mountbatten (Governor-General and Viceroy of India) and Nizam of Hyderabad, Mir Osman Ali Khan on 29th November, 1947 A.D.

In 1920s during freedom struggle various people's movements were launched in the princely states of British Raj. These movements were called State Peoples Conference or Praja Mandals. These movements were spearheaded by people living in princely states who were subject to the rule of local aristocrats rather than the British Raj. They campaigned against those feudatory rulers, and sometimes also the British administrators, in attempts to improve their civil rights.
